One particular application is in the recovery of particles of catalytic material from the exhaust emissions of diesel engines. With the relatively high temperature of exhaust gases from diesel engines, catalytic materials in the form of particulate are readily destroyed by the exhaust gases and are thereby lost. It is therefore desirable to have a retrievable filter which will permit the passage of gases and particulate therethrough while at the same time retaining the catalyst material so as to permit the particulate to be retrieved. The conventional method of retrieval of particulate from a diesel engine exhaust is to provide
